*Sandy Hellig goes foraging – have you thought of plums?
Many thanks to Julia Loken for the illustration.*

Boundary hedgerows were planted with many interesting trees, plum being a common choice. Abandoned orchards and self-seeded plum trees can be found in many places too, so a walk around the village can't fail to turn up all manner of unusual varieties.

If you decide to forage for plums (or any other food) think about:

- Where are you foraging and whose land is it on?
- The tree or shrub is living; don't damage it by breaking branches etc.
- Only picking what you need, leave some for other foragers and wildlife.
- Not leaving litter, take a spare bag and collect some litter, giving something back to nature.
